SENEGAL: Political parity for women is now within reach, thanks to UN Women’s support both in drafting a 2010 parity law and implementing the law during recent parliamentary elections. Female parliamentarians now constitute 44.6 percent of Senegal’s National Assembly.

PAKISTAN: On International Women’s Day 2012, the parliament strengthened the scope, authority, and funding of the National Commission on the Status of Women, which investigates women’s rights violations. This bill is one of several laws passed over the past two years that advance women’s rights in Pakistan. UN Women worked hand-in-hand with both local NGOs and parliamentarians to draft and implement these laws.

MALI: Against a backdrop of armed conflict in the north and a military coup d’état, four women from REPSFCO/Mali, a women’s peace and security network, attended the country’s transitional negotiations in April 2012. With UN Women’s support and assistance, the delegates succeeded in having all their demands (the full participation of women in resolving Mali’s conflict, respect for human rights, and an end to sexual violence) included in the final declaration.

PACIFIC ISLAND NATIONS: For women vendors in the Pacific Islands, UN Women’s support has led to improved and safer working conditions for women vendors and introduced a management model that allowed women to become leaders in the marketplace, with decision-making power on products, customers, and locations.

WORLDWIDE: Throughout 2012, UN Women executive director Michelle Bachelet continued to advocate for the full rights and participation of women in all countries. In January, Ms. Bachelet testified about the importance of women’s rights in front of the Council of Europe and the World’s Economic Forum. During the OECD’s May meeting, she reminded member states about the need for gender parity in their own governments. At the Rio+20 Summit in June, Ms. Bachelet highlighted the pivotal role that women play in sustainable development and called for the active inclusion of women in all international environmental frameworks.

These milestones represent just a small portion of UN Women’s work around the globe. UN Women programs and grantees train, educate, integrate, protect, and empower women in all walks of life. UN Women’s work is vertical, ranging from funding grass-roots organizations to mobilizing the entire UN system to introduce gender-sensitive programs and budgets. UN Women’s influence is also horizontal, extending across society to introduce economic reforms, instill equitable political laws and norms, address cultural barriers to gender equality, and empower individuals. With programs in over 70 countries and 18 national committees, UN Women brings together women and men, young girls and grandmothers, for the common goal of gender equality. Its message is both powerful and positive: the empowerment of women is for the greater good of all of us.

The US National Committee for UN Women (USNC-UN Women) is the bridge between UN Women and the United States. We are their 501(c)(3) representative and we work to increase financial, political, and public support for UN Women. We do this by:

- Educating our members and the American public about UN Women and its global projects
- Engaging US policymakers to support UN Women and the implementation of international agreements on women’s rights
- Raising funds that support UN Women projects

The following pages detail how we engage our communities and members across the nation to increase support for UN Women. Whether it was the 5th annual conference in Washington, DC, or a peace walk in commemoration of Mother’s Day in Los Angeles, we continually meet men and women, students and retirees, who are passionate about helping women and girls worldwide.

Finally, I am very grateful to all our members for their generosity. Without your donations, we could not carry out our education and advocacy programs within the United States, nor contribute directly to UN Women and its programs. I also thank the many volunteers at the national and chapter level who devote countless hours to USNC-UN Women. As a volunteer-led organization, we depend on your time and talents to spread the word of UN Women’s vital work and raise funds to support our mission. I look forward to another year working with you as we strive to create a world where women and girls live free from violence, poverty, and inequality.

Sincerely,

Maggie Forster Schmitz

U.S. National Committee: Who We Are

The U.S. National Committee (USNC) for UN Women is an independent non-profit, 501(c)(3) organization that supports the mission of UN Women and social, political, and economic equality for women and girls around the world. Our members and supporters are men, women, and children in cities around the country who give their time and resources to support a world where women of all ages have access to education and employment opportunities, and sustainable livelihoods that enable them to live free of gender-based violence.

Originally chartered in 1983 as a National Committee for UNIFEM (now part of UN Women), the U.S. National Committee is committed to expanding support and raising funds within the United States for UN Women. Through the help of our Board of Directors, Advisory Council, local chapters and members, we help support UN Women projects that span 100 countries around the globe.

Building Our Organization – Giving More to UN Women:
USNC-UN Women re-Launch Fundraising Campaign Officially Begins

In January 2012, at the semi-annual board meeting in San Francisco, the USNC board of directors took a hard look at how to achieve greater results within the current infrastructure. We determined that, for us to support global empowerment of women, we needed to increase our capacity. To sustain that capacity, we needed a new fund development strategy. So, the re-Launch campaign was designed and kicked off in early 2012 with the goal to raise $1 million.

The strategy of the campaign is to involve the entire board in engaging more personally with our donors, seeking pledges with a 3-year commitment. The commitment would ensure income flow and the engine required to sustain USNC operational income and provide increased funds for donation to UN Women programs. In support, our board and committee members committed to personally give $50,000 over the next 3 years, a great “down payment” for the campaign. The support of the board sets a powerful example for our members to join us in giving. In May 2012, this commitment was complemented by a grant from the Forrest and Florence Lattner Foundation, bringing the total raised and committed in the first 6 months of this campaign to $107,650.

Highlights from 2011–2012

USNC-UN Women Chapters Host Annual Walks to End Violence Against Women and Girls

The Chapters of USNC-UN Women hosted their annual Walks to End Violence Against Women and Girls across the United States. To highlight the walks, USNC-UN Women held a t-shirt design contest that was used by all of the chapters. The entries were all amazing and creative and the voting was close. In the end, Asher Jay was the declared winner with her forward looking design. Jay is an artist, writer, designer and activist currently living in New York.

One of the primary goals of the USNC is to eliminate violence against women and girls worldwide. Unfortunately, this type of violence is enormous: up to 70% of women experience physical or sexual violence from men in their lifetime; among women aged 15 to 44, acts of violence cause more death and disability than cancer, malaria, traffic accidents and war combined; the cost of intimate partner violence in the U.S. exceeds $5.8 billion per year; 102 countries have no specific legal provisions against domestic violence.

Money raised from the walks goes to support a number of programs that further the fight against violence toward women and girls, including the UN Trust Fund. The Trust Fund, administered by UN Women, is the only global multi-lateral grant-making mechanism exclusively devoted to supporting local, national and regional efforts of organizations to combat gender-based violence. Since it began operations in 1997, the Trust Fund has awarded more than US$19 million to 263 initiatives to address violence against women in 115 countries.
Dear Friends,

In creating UN Women, the international community sent a strong message that gender equality and women’s rights are global imperatives. It took four years of hard work to realize the dream of millions of women and girls to have a global “champion” at the UN to galvanize stronger action to end widespread violence and discrimination against women.

I am determined that UN Women lives up to expectations as a driver for change, offering new energy, drawing on core ideas and values, and bringing together men, women and young people across the globe in a shared endeavor for gender equality.

In the second year of UN Women’s existence, there is much to build on and plan for growth ahead. Working together, we can make greater progress in our priority areas of advancing women’s political participation and leadership, enhancing women’s economic empowerment, ending violence against women and girls, increasing women’s role in peacemaking and peacebuilding, and supporting gender-responsive planning and budgeting. All of our work is grounded in human rights.

Gender inequality is not an issue confined to any one group of countries or societies. It is a universal issue. Thus, we need partners in every country to make greater progress. We must convince all political actors — including ministers of finance and trade as well as health and education — that advancing women’s rights and equal opportunity is not only the right thing to do, it is vital for social cohesion, political stability, and economic growth.

National Committees play a key role in raising awareness about gender equality and advocating action in UN Women’s priority areas. I extend my deep appreciation for the support that National Committees and their membership provide in funding UN Women programmes that bring about real change in the lives of women and girls and their communities.

Looking ahead, we have a great deal of exciting and ambitious work that we need to get done. I look forward to strong partnership with UN Women National Committees to advance gender equality and the empowerment of women.

Thank you.
